MESSAGE FROM THE COMMANDER/CHAPLAIN

Hello my Confederate brothers and sisters,

I hope April is treating y'all well.

This is the beginning of our busy season and it is definitely not letting us forget that. We have several events in our near future and I hope to see everyone at as many as we can make. If you have not made it to an event I would definitely recommend it. It really is a good time with good folks.

Although we are all so busy this time of year, I would like to take a second to remind us all (myself included) to remember to take a minute, slow down and thank the Lord for all he does for us individually as well as a country. Pray and give thanks. God loves to hear from us.

Hope to see y'all soon.

Until then, God bless y'all and God bless Dixie.

Paul Hutcheson.

1st Lieutenant's Report

Greetings Compatriots,

I trust everyone got all their gravestones flagged. I hope everyone had a wonderful Easter celebration as well.

We had a meeting of the 2025 Division Reunion committee at the Triple G in Stephenville. We accomplished a lot and made headway and direction for what we needed to accomplish to continue to move forward.

Brenda and I went to the Battle of Pleasant Hill this past weekend. We had a great time dancing and visiting with our friends throughout the Confederation. Also participating from our camp was Kevin Wilson and Jackson Richmond.

I look forward to seeing everyone again at our next camp meeting. Be sure to look at upcoming events, find something to attend and participate in to support our camp.

May God bless you and may God bless Dixie!

Old Business: Motion by Dave Guise to move meetings to Hwy6 Cafe in DeLeon, 2nd by Mason Spikes. Discussion began with Charles Ditmore opposing by saying 1904 never paid the $40 out of Camp funds. He added in years past the Camp always had sandwiches and that was fine till the women became involved and made it a competition against each other. He said he felt these "meals" were not necessary. Eddie Cox continued with a concern for storage of flags/banners. Stating he would resign from Color Guard if the camp moved to DeLeon. Eddie also reported that Camp 1904 had no contract with the Comanche Mercantile so the "$40" in question is not required. Charles D added he paid the $40 out of his pocket and planned to continue. Tommy Alford injected that the Camp should put out a kitty jar for everyone to contribute. Dave Guise spoke in favor of the move stating he felt the "DeLeon" camp should move back to it's Charter town- Hwy6 Cafe offered no charges, no set up or clean up and food from a menu. Commander Hutcheson asked for any other meeting sites-none offered. He then called for Vote to move to Hwy6 Cafe in DeLeon.

3 in favor 4 Against. Motion Failed.

New Business: Replacement of Steve Bondy as 2nd Lt. Mason Spikes nominated himself, 2nd by Dave Guise. Unanimous vote in favor.

Eddie Cox stated the Comanche Museum event for April 20th needed 4 volunteers. Jim Harvey spoke concerning the lack of gun raffle sales. Reminding everyone this is funding of the 2025 Reunion. Drawing is set for March 23 and at this time there are not enough ticket sales to cover even half of the cost of the weapon. Commander Hutcheson calls for any other New Business....none...

Eddie Cox motion to close meeting. Mason Spikes 2nd

Commander calls for comments and closes meeting.

April in History

The War for Southern Independence – It began and ended in April.

It begins- April 12, 1861. At 4:30 a.m., a flaming mortar shot arcs into the air and explodes over Fort Sumter. On this signal, Confederate guns from fortifications and floating batteries around Charleston Harbor roar to life. Outmanned, outgunned, undersupplied, and nearly surrounded by enemy batteries, Anderson waits until around 7:00 a.m. to respond. Captain Abner Doubleday volunteers to fire the first cannon at the Confederates, a 32-pound shot that bounces off the roof of the Iron Battery on Cummings Point.

For nearly 36 hours the two sides keep up this unequal contest. A shell strikes the flagpole of Fort Sumter, and the American colors fall to the earth, only to be hoisted back up the hastily repaired pole. Confederates fire hotshot from Fort Moultrie into Fort Sumter. Buildings begin to burn within the fort. With no more resources, Anderson surrenders Fort Sumter to Confederate forces.

April 13. At 2:30 p.m., Maj. Anderson and his men strike their colors and prepare to leave the fort. Sadly, the only casualties at Fort Sumter come during the 100-gun salute, when a round explodes prematurely, killing Pvt. Daniel Hough and mortally wounding another soldier. The attack is over, but the war had just begun.

4 bloody years later. It ends - April 9th, 1865, was the end of the War for General Robert E. Lee and the Confederate Army of Northern Virginia. For Lt. General Ulysses S. Grant and tens of thousands of Federal and Confederate troops fighting further south, the war stretched out for several more months. After Appomattox, however, only the most zealous and desperate could pretend the Union was not already victorious and the Confederacy was destined to end.

As the sun rose on April 9th in Appomattox, General Lee still clung to the belief his war was not over. 8,000 men from Maj. General John B. Gordon's Second Corps, along with Lee's nephew Fitzhugh Lee and what remained of the Confederate cavalry, were lined up for battle just west of the village of Appomattox Court House. Robert E. Lee hoped there was only a thin line of Union cavalry ahead of him that he could smash through, find supplies and rations, and then turn south to march to North Carolina to continue the fight. For a week Grant thwarted Lee's plans to turn south. He actively blocked Lee's movements and tried to surround his forces. As a result of these efforts, Grant's forces had finally gotten ahead of Lee at Appomattox. Lee was in the middle of the fight; his headquarters was east of the village near the center of his army. Gordon's Second Corps and the Cavalry were west of the village readying for a fight, and Longstreet's command, the First Corps and Third Corps of the ANV, were in the east guarding the rear. Lee knew more Federal troops were approaching from the east and perhaps the south, and he hoped he could move his army before the Federal reinforcements arrived. Lee's hopes were dashed by the arrival of thousands of Union infantry, including United States Colored Troops, who had marched most of the night to block the way. By 8:00a.m., Gordon's men retreated toward the village, Fitzhugh Lee's cavalry was fleeing toward the west, and Lee knew his war was over.

Grant had ridden west all morning toward the fighting, knowing he was drawing near to the end of the Army of Northern Virginia. On April 7th, after the Confederates had suffered a catastrophic defeat at the Battle of Sailor's Creek, Grant asked Lee to surrender and declared any "further effusion of blood" was solely Lee's responsibility. Lee, still believing he could escape Grant, declined to surrender but did ask about the possibility of a peace agreement. Grant tactfully replied that he could not discuss a peace agreement, but he could consider a military surrender. As he realized his army was cornered, Lee asked to discuss terms of surrender on April 9.

Lee arrived at the McLean House sometime after one o'clock and waited there with Marshall and Babcock. Grant and his staff arrived at McLean's parlor half an hour later from the west after riding dozens of miles around the two armies that morning. Grant was uncertain how to bring up the subject of surrender, so after introducing his staff and the army commanders with him, he brought up the Mexican War and the brief meeting the two men had then. Eventually Lee said they should get to the business at hand. In his order book, Grant quickly wrote out the terms, which had already been outlined for Lee in the letters the two generals exchanged over the two previous days. Contrary to many visitor's expectations, there is no formal surrender document. The surrender was conducted through an exchange of two short letters. Grant's was a mere five sentences long and Lee's reply was only three very short, terse sentences.

The heart of the terms was that Confederates would be paroled after surrendering their weapons and other military property. If surrendered soldiers did not take up arms again, the United States government would not prosecute them. Grant also allowed Confederate officers to keep their mounts and side arms. Lee appeared relieved by the terms. Grant said he could not tell what Lee was thinking, but some indication of his anxiety might be inferred. When Lee dressed in his finest uniform that morning, he indicated to his staff that he expected to be taken prisoner and wanted to be in proper form and "make his best appearance".

Although Lee agreed to the terms, he asked if his men could keep their horses and mules in the cavalry and artillery. The Confederate army provided weapons and military property, but the men provided their own mounts. Grant indicated he would not amend the terms but would issue a separate order allowing that to happen. Lee said he thought that would have a happy effect on his men. Lee and Grant also agreed to appoint three officers from each army to act as "commissioner" for the surrender who would work out the details of issuing parole passes, returning Union prisoners the Confederates had captured along the retreat, and sending rations from Union lines to Confederates. Over the next few weeks, additional Confederate forces surrendered using Grant's terms for Lee as a
